

“Honors women who address the reality of their lives with ferocious eloquence... Outstandingly potent.”

– Wall Street Journal

ALL OF ME

a story of love, loss and last resorts

Broadcast on PBS

[ITVS]

a film by Alexandra Lescaze

“Its examination of obesity is serious, intimate and not at all sensationalistic.”

- New York Times

Through the personal stories of three severely obese women, All Of Me shines a fresh light on the causes, challenges, and psychological struggles surrounding obesity, while also confronting our society's attitudes and prejudices towards those who are overweight. With searing honesty, the “girls” take us through their struggles before and after weight-loss surgery, including the variety of issues and consequences they anticipated, as well as those they never imagined.

All Of Me is available for screenings in homes, communities, weight loss groups, health agencies and colleges.

Use the film to:

- Challenge weight bias and discrimination in our society
- Build a community of support and action around obesity issues
- Increase understanding of what is involved in weight-loss surgery
